USSR-BULGARIA: Possible Soviet Displeasure

The US Embassy in Moscow reports that an apparent slight in Soviet press coverage of the meeting this week between General Secretary Andropov and President Zhivkov may reflect displeasure with the Bulgarian leader. Pravda stated that an atmosphere of "friendship and cordiality" and "full unity of views" prevailed during the meeting. At the sametime, it failed to highlight either leader's name or to claim "full mutual understanding," as was done with the party chiefs from Czechoslovakia, Hungary, and East Germany.

Comment: The diminished coverage may be further evidence of Moscow's reported unhappiness with what it views as an emerging trend toward nationalism in Bulgaria. Andropov's sensitivity to Western press speculation that he was involved with the alleged Bulgarian plot to assassinate the Pope also may have led him to play down his personal contact with Zhivkov. In the West, however, Moscow will continue its firm denials of any Bulgarian complicity.

KENYA: Fuel Shortages

A fire this week at Kenya's major oil depot, which resulted in a loss of $4 million worth of gasoline, will accelerate the country's economic decline. The fire also destroyed electrical equipment for the national pipeline, requiring shipments of petroleum products to Kenya and neighboring countries to be transported by truck or train. According to press reports, President Moi claims that sabotage could be involved.

Comment: The fire and the shutdown of the pipeline will cause severe gasoline shortages over the holiday period. Even before the incident, Nairobi and most other cities were suffering from shortages of diesel fuel and kerosene. The security forces probably can contain any disorders. Moi may try to deflect criticism by blaming Uganda and Tanzania for the fire, and he is likely to ask the US for emergency help to restore the depot and pipeline.

Without a strong leader, the digruntled members of the military will be reluctant to oppose Bouterse. They probably will adopt a wait-and-see attitude. Further provocative actions by Bouterse or a deterioration in the economic situation could revive open opposition.
The cutoff of aid from the Netherlands, which has provided almost all of Suriname's foreign assistance, will force Paramaribo into a difficult search for alternative sources. Without a quick infusion of funds, spending cuts in the bloated public-sector employment rolls would be likely. To augment its revenues, the government could place additional levies on businesses.
//The regime also could nationalize Dutch assets. Such a move, however, would lead to the withdrawal of other foreign investment and to the further emigration of skilled labor.//
The Cuban Role
Suriname and Cuba established diplomatic relations in 1979. Bouterse initially was cool to Cuban efforts to forge closer ties, but relations gradually warmed after December 1980. Following an abortive coup attempt in March 1982, open and clandestine dealings among Bouterse, various pro-Cuban Surinamese, and the Cubans accelerated.
//There is no indication of direct Cuban involvement in the executions. Bouterse probably had no plans to deal with the consequences of his actions, however, and thus turned quickly to Havana for advice and support.
